

Table 3 Children's place-based data

Gordon Hectar, Director, Upstream

There is growing interest in engaging children and young people directly in local services and government. Their digital footprint creates new opportunities to understand and engage with young people. But there are complex questions about what kind of digital tools are appropriate, about the quality of some data on young people, and the handling of sensitive information. This session would explore some recent thinking and understanding participant's views on how place, children and data should interact.